The Widdy McCarthy was poor and distressed, And she lived in a mean little cot. But the pridle of her heart and the joy of her breast. Was the nate little pig that she'd got. Wid his two twinkling eyes, that were both of a size.

And his tail in a double bowknot. Whenever the Widdy McCarthy was glad,

Whenever the Widdy McCarthy was grad,
The pig he would caper and sing.
And It she were weeping or ever seemed sad,
That pig did the very same thing.
"Fill I fin sure you'd have thought, when you looked at the two.
That a couple more loving no one ever knew.

And so this foud pair travelled over life's road,
Till they came to the foot of the hill.
Where the Whildy died first in a manner that showed
It was want of breath kept her so still.
And that pig dropped a tear when he looked at her face.
And he lay down and died in the very same place!

"What!" thundered the beautiful girl, as sparks of fire flushed from her magnificent eyes. "Would you insult a nineteenth-century maiden by asking her for a kiss?" Become base variet, ere her for a kiss? Begone, base variet, ere I summon the aid of the gods and crush you beneath the tremendous weight of my terrible wrath and indignation, and leave nothing but a smear to mark the spot where once stood the form of a presumptions man.

leave nothing but a smear to mark the spot where once stood the form of a presumptuous man."

The young man qualled before this terrible avalanche of anger. He tried to speak, but his tongue refused its office; and he who had bravely dashed through blood and fire, laced shot and shell, now stood pale and trembling before this proud, imperious beauty, as she stood, beautiful even in her anger, like an avenging goddess pouring out her torrent of concentrated fur upon a rebellious nation. He glanced around the gymnasium for a means of escape, but, divining his intention, she flew to the door with lightning rapidity, and, having placed a thousand-pound weight against it, said in a voice ringling with withering contempt:

"But the w-w-woman w-w-was made for the—"

He did not finish the sentence, for with a look that would have set fire to a load of hay, she took in his measure, and with a strength born of desperation she seized a fifty-six-pound shot and threw it with such terrific force that it penetrated the six-inch iron door and was lost in space.

The young man, feeling very small, crept through the hole the shot had made, and he is now on the way to see Jules Verne with a view to securing his passage to another planet.

This is Minister Lincoln's Favorite Story.

A well known Chicago physician re-turned from a little visit to relatives in the interior of the State last week. He had been carried beyond his destina-tion once before, so when he boarded the car in the evening he called the porter to him as soon as that dignitary's attention could be attracted, and held the following conversation with him:

"John, hero's a dollar for you." Yes, sah."
And I'm going to get off at Rockford

"And I'm going to get off at Rockford to-night," continued the Doctor. "Yes, sah," said John.
"That means I don't want to be carried through to Dubuque."
"Yes, sah."
"So, if you can't wake me up in time to dress, I want you to see that you get me off anyway, no matter what happens."

"Yes sah," and they parted.

In due season the medical man went to his berth with a feeling of blessed security. About daybreak he was awakened by hearing a feminine yoice from the section just across say:
"Porter, are we in Dubuque yet?"
"No'm we sin't dah yit," he answered, huskily, but we'll be dah inhalf 'n'our."
Thoroughly aroused and very angry,
the Chicago man threw the curtains
apart and saw the porter grinning feebly.

"Here, you black rascal," shouted the aggrieved traveler, "didn't I tell you to get me off at Rockford?"

"Lord bless man soul, mistah," said the sable brother, jumping, "is you de man dat was going to git off at Rockford?"

Then adding, reflectively, as he felt of a torn ear, "I wonder who de man was dat I put off at Rockford?" was dat I put off at Rockford?"

judges, the American Protective Tariff League hereby announces the award of prizes to senior college students of 1891 for essays on the subject: "The effect of Protection on the Purchasing Power of Wages in the United States."

The first prize of $150 has been awarded to Nathaniel A. Elsberg, College of the City of New York. The second prize of $100 has been awarded to Fred Hamilton Tarr, Amherst College The third prize of $50 has been awarded to Milton I. Dunlap, Cornell University. Silver medals for especially meritorious essays have been awarded to D. W. Parsons, Colby University; George A. Cooke, Lawrence University; Samuel J. Pawling, Lafayette College.

The judges were: William McKinley, ir., George Gunton, David Hall Rice, R. H. Thurston, Joseph Xinnio, jr. The taking of the first prize by a student of the College of the City of New York is most significant. It shows that the opportunities and advantages of New York's free college are as great as those of Yale, Harvard, Cornell, or any other "university." Again, it emphasizes the great value of our educational institutions, the best in the world, and free to all who are worthy to enjoy their privileges. Thanks to the blessings of a Protective Tariff, the poor man's son has an equal advantage with the rich. The laborer's children can have as good an education as the children of his employer. What a grand lesson this is and what an argument for Protection. what an argument for Protection.

The foreign markets had loat a good deal of yesterday's bnovancy, and, like the trade on this side, apquared to crave a rest. The highest point of the day for December wheat was reashed about 11 o'clock, and the the advance, which occurred their, made the quotation $104$°C, and was caused by a dispatch which reported that Russia had included wheat in the order prohibiting exports. The truth of the report was doubted, however, as only one house here received any such news. The weakiness which the market showed in the latter part of the restord was due to lower quotations from the foreign markets.
